Two Pretty Girls.

Two Pretty Girls.

The girl was a regular church attendant and her photograph taken in her confirmation dress two years ago furnishes some idea of her geod looks. Since then she has developed considerably and now she looks much older than her sixteen years. The description as furnished by her mother shows her girl of five feet six inches, of light hamplexion, light brown hair and big blue eyes. When last seen at home sie wore a black suit and lacket, a Vesti Tilley hat, black stockings and laced shoes. The Morgan girl is a pronounced brunette, but of similar build. She wore a light suit and dark brown hat with waving black feathers.

The idea of her daughter's contemplated elopement never entered Mrs. Mulhearn's head until Sunday morning. Mary had been to a dance the night before with Mary Morgan, and did not return until 8 o'clock Sunday. She was upbraided, when her mother told her she could not remain in the house and keep such hours. The girl at once became rebellious, and said she would go to her grandmother, Mrs. Golden, at No. 879. Tenth avenue. Later it was learned that she did not go there, but was home as usual that night.

Then the mother began to investigate. She learned that the two girls had spent much of their time with two men who had arrived a few weeks ago from Philadelphia. She questioned her daughter on that point and she admitted that much of what her mother said was
